Description

A 1930s GECoRAY silvered shop display lamp with mercury glass interior and original gallery. Rewired with nickel lamp holder and white twisted fabric flex and ready for use as pendant lamp.

GECoRay lighting was a distinctive range of early 20th-century British light fittings produced by the General Electric Company under the GECoRay name. Originally designed for shop windows and commercial displays, these lights used mirrored or silvered glass to reflect and amplify illumination, making products appear brighter and more eye-catching.

GECoRay fittings typically feature elegant glass shades combined with metal galleries, blending practicality with refined industrial design. Today, original GECoRay lights are highly sought after as vintage or antique pieces, valued for their craftsmanship, historical significance, and ability to add character and warmth to modern interior spaces.
