Description

An early 19th century mahogany butler's tray and stand with formed gallery, circa 1820.

A butler's tray is a versatile and elegant piece of furniture traditionally used for serving food and drinks. It typically features a removable tray with raised edges and cut-out handles, resting on a folding stand for easy transport and storage.

Originating in 18th-century England, butler's trays were designed for household staff to serve guests efficiently. Today, they combine function and style, often used as side tables, portable bars, or decorative accents.
