Description

An Arts & Crafts amethyst rivière necklace retailed by Liberty of London, circa 1910.

Liberty of London is a celebrated department store and design house known for its distinctive fabrics and eclectic British style. Founded in 1875 by Arthur Lasenby Liberty, it quickly became a hub for artistic innovation, championing craftsmanship and global influences. Its iconic Tudor-revival building on Great Marlborough Street remains a landmark destination for fashion, interiors, and beauty.

Liberty's signature floral and paisley prints continue to inspire designers worldwide, blending heritage with contemporary creativity. Today, the brand symbolizes individuality, quality, and the enduring appeal of thoughtfully made objects. Its collaborations span fashion, homeware, and lifestyle brands, extending its cultural influence globally.
