Description

A pair of Georgian cut steel bangles one with a cut steel tassel, circa 1790.

Cut steel jewellery is an intricate, antique craft dating back to the 18th century, celebrated for its sparkling, diamond-like allure. Crafted from tiny, faceted steel studs, artisans meticulously rivet each piece onto a base, creating dazzling designs.

Popular during the Georgian and Victorian eras, this jewellery reflected elegance and innovation. It often adorned brooches, earrings, and necklaces. Today, cut steel jewellery remains a sought-after collectible, admired for its craftsmanship, historical value, and unique, metallic brilliance.
